THE CONGRESSIONAL QUESTION IN THE FIRST DISTRICT.

It has been frequently announced by some papers outside of Jefferson county that Congressman Caswell was not a candidate, but upon what authority they based this statement did not appear, as Mr. Caswell had not written a word on the subject one way or another, and his home papers have not printed a line that would lead any one to infer that he would decline a renomination thus giving Mr. Williams an open field in the congressional race.

The apportionment of last winter unfortunately placed Mr. Caswell and Mr. Williams in the same district. It was unfortunate, because it antagonized the interests of two friends, as both of them would doubtless esteem it an honor to be returned to Congress. But Jefferson county, the home of Mr. Caswell, being put in the First district with Mr. Williams, gave the latter the advantage as it gave him the virtual control of four counties to Mr. Caswell one. This seemed to be the view of the situation taken generally throughout the district, except probably in Jefferson county from which there came no intimation as to what course Mr. Caswell would take. Fully appreciating the embarrassing position in which Caswell was unfortunately placed, the Gazette very timely decided to take no advantage of his unpleasant situation by retiring him from the canvass without authority. In justice to Mr. Caswell, and that the Republicans of the First district might no longer be kept in the dark as to the purpose of that gentleman, the editor of the Gazette wrote to him for information asking whether he would be a candidate not, and the following answer was returned:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C., June 19, 1882.

N. Smith, Esq., Janesville.

MY DEAR SIR:—I have received yours of the 16th inst., expressing a wish to know whether I shall be a candidate for the next Congress. You quite surprise me in making this inquiry. Judging from the papers in your city of late, I did not suppose that was an open question with you. After a consultation with Mr. Williams some time ago, I understood, an armistice should prevail until the close of this session that we might better ascertain the wishes of the people in the new district. I had but little if any doubt that the expression would be for him. But while the papers of my county have remained silent, a paper in your city makes haste to announce that I am not a candidate, and I see in the Semi-Weekly Gazette of the 16th inst. a dispatch dated at Washington, disposing of me with even greater ease. I have been quite willing that that ground should be taken, that nearly all of the territory in the new district consists of Mr. Williams' old district, and that I could hardly expect to take the nomination from him, but the policy of disposing of me on personal grounds, as the dispatch of the 14th inst., which finds place in your paper, assumes to do, I think quite unnecessary and unfair. Certainly it will not tend to bring harmony between Rock and Jefferson county, for while my people may not see any very sure prospect of my return to Congress, I feel certain they have some respect for me. I have been hard at work of late, and have given this subject very little attention, and I don't know whether I want to be a candidate or not. My inclination is against it; and I think the papers of your city, for Mr. Williams' sake, if not for mine, can afford to forego a little of their zeal, to see me set aside, until I can get through with my work here, and go back to Wisconsin.

Very Sincerely Yours,
L. B. CASWELL.

It is is no more than simple justice to Mr. Caswell that this letter should be made public, inasmuch as it is the first time he has spoken on the congressional question through the press; and beside that, fairness to Mr. Williams would demand its publication. Wishing to be perfectly fair toward Mr. Caswell, who has served his constituents so faithfully and well, and also entirely just to Mr. Williams, whose services in Congress are recognized by the entire Republican party in the First district, the Gazette has taken no advantage of Mr. Caswell's embarrassing situation, and its course will be endorsed by his friends, and approved by all the honest friends of Mr. Williams in the district.

John B. Gough is preaching temperance in Georgia with great success; at least he is drawing well.

Hanging seems to be a serious business with Guiteau now, and since he has made up his mind that he must hang, his sanity is more marked than ever.

There is not much hope that Congress will pass a bill to change the manner of counting the electoral votes. A majority of the members cannot agree upon any definite plan.

The Cameron wing of the Republican party in Pennsylvania have peremptorily refused to call a new State convention. That looks like a defeat of both tickets, but it is hoped that the indications are not a forerunner of what the ultimate result will be.

It is reported that Secretary of War Lincoln says Lieutenant Flipper was dismissed because he was no gentleman and not because he was an embezzler. To which the Inter Ocean very pertinently makes answer that 'there must be a great deal of official shaking in boots if that policy is to become general."

Governor Sherman, of Iowa, makes an appeal to the people for aid for those who have been rendered homeless by the direful tornado in that State. The sympathies of the people of this country are easily touched by a calamity so appalling as that which visited Iowa last Saturday, and they will respond promptly and liberally.

There comes a report from New York that the recent examinations in that city of 800 boys from the grammar schools, who sought to gain admission to the free college "developed the fact that a large proportion of those who gained the highest marks were of Jewish parentage. It has been observed that the best pupils of the grammar schools, both in deportment and scholarship, come from Jewish families.'

The Republicans of Maine expect to receive about 10,000 majority for their State ticket next September. The days of the Democratic-Greenback party in Maine have been numbered.

The country can hope for an adjournment of Congress about the middle of July.

GROWING SERIOUS.

WASHINGTON, June 21.—Guiteau was reported by the jail officers to-day unusually serious and uncommunicative. No person was admitted to see him but his spiritual adviser, who spent several hours with him. One of the officers remarked: "He has an anxious, haggard look. I think he begins to realize that he is doomed."

Warden Crocker stated the execution would be a private one, and only a few members of the press and jail officials will be permitted to witness it. The gallows were erected some days ago in the east corridor of the north wing

Miss Chevailler, of Boston, secretary of the National Society for the Protection of the Insane, had a short interview with the President yesterday, in reference to Guiteau's case, and arranged an audience with the President to-morrow, when Dr. George M. Beard and others will advance arguments in favor of a short respite, in order to allow a proper commission to fully investigate the question of Guiteau's insanity.

GREEN BAY, June 21.—The Grand Temple of Wisconsin was in session here today. The convention is well attended, a number of members of the order from cities in the State, who are not members of the Grand Temple, being present. The reports show the order to be in a very flourishing condition, substantial gains having been made in all directions during the past year. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: J. A. Watrous G. W. Chief Templar; W. C. Bailey, Green Bay, G. W. V. Templar; S. C. Burnham, Janesville, G. W. Recorder; Rev. STATE UNIVERSITY.

MADISON, June 22.—Although the morning opened very damp and uncomfortable, promptly at 9 o'clock a large audience gathered at University Assembly Hall to listen to the commencement exercises of the class of 82'. The galleries and floor were packed with an audience composed of citizens, students, friends of the class, and alumni. On the platform were the faculty, members of the board of regents, Gov. Rusk, Attorney—Gen. Frisby, Junge Bunn, Gen. Atwood, Col. E. W. Keyes. and other distinguished persons.

The exercises were opened by a selection from Claudet's band, of Milwaukee which furnished the music for the occassion. A prayer was offered by Dr. Eli Corwin, of Racine.

There were seventeen orations, and the Lewis prize for the best oration was awarded to David F. Simpson, of Waupun, and it seems to have been the general opinion of the audience that he fairly won the honor. The exercises as a whole were of a superior character. The orations showed conciseness of expression and a great degree of elocutionary proficiency was manifest in the delivery. The committee to award the Lewis prize consisted of Charles N. Gregory, Esq., Hon. L. W. Colby, and Mrs. Jennie Field Bashford.

A FALSE STEP.

SOUTH CHICAGO, June 21—The community will be shocked to learn this morning that Mrs. Susa Remington, the young and pretty wife of John Remington, eloped yesterday with Edward Oakes, a young man about 32 years of age. The parties above named boarded at the same house, and been acquainted only a few days. Mrs. Remington was detected by one of the servants packing her clothes in Oakes' trunk, whom she then represented as her brother, but begged the servant to say nothing of the matter. She then kissed her husband good-by, who was then lying in a drunken stupor, from which he has not yet recovered. Mrs. Remington then walked away, saying she was going down the street. It is supposed that she and Oakes took the train together, as neither had been seen since. She had threatened the day before that, if her husband did not sober up from a protracted spree she would do something desperate. Both elopers were intelligent and refined and stood high in society. She affair leaked out late to-night.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

WAUKESHA, Wis, June 21—This town was the scene of intense excitement, especially among the older residents of the city, to-day, as a report became current that Dr. Hugo Philler, one of the best known physicians of this county, had administered a dose of morphine to Mrs. Magdelena Hille, by mistake, and that Mrs. Hille had died from the effects of the drug. Investigation at once proved the report to be only too true. The facts, as as learned by a Republican-Sentinel reporter, were as follows: Mrs. Hille resides seven miles southwest of town and was aged 63 years. For some time past she has suffered intensely with dropsy and her life has been despaired of. Dr. Philler was her physician and under stood her case so thoroughly that it was not necessary for him to make daily visits upon Mrs. Hille, and members of her family would come to town and procure the medicine necessary for her. Yesterday afternoon a daughter of Mrs. Hille's came after the medicine. Dr. Philler had just returned from a tiresome trip to the country and was about exhausted; having been up all night. When Mrs. Hille's daughter appeared, he took out his medicine case with the intention of sending her quinine, and put up what he thought was 12 grains of that drug. The girl took the medicine and started home, arriving late in the afternoon. Mrs. Hille took the dose and at once fell into a deep sleep; her family all unconscious of the terrible mistake which had been made. In the meantime Dr. Philler, soon after the girls departure, was called to prescribe for a patient, and on opening his medicine case to get some morphine saw, to his horror, that he had given a large portion of what was in his morphine bottle to Mrs. Hills daughter, to take to her mother. Dr. Philler of course realized the situation, and hurriedly ordered his team, procured a stomach-pump, and antidotes, and drove as fast as he could to the Hille residence. The time of his arrival was about fifty minutes after the morphine had been adminstered. He at once used the stomach-pump and applied his best art, but all to no purpose—Mrs. Hille was beyond all help, and died soon after.

Dr. Philler is in greatest mental agony over his horrible blunder, and claims that in all his long years, of practice, this is his first mistake.

A Trip into the Rocky Mountains.

NO. FIVE.

The train passes the Raton Mountains at an elevation of nearly 8,000 feet. In about seven hours, it reaches Las Vegas, a town only 1,300 feet lower, and located one-fourth the distance across the Territory of New Mexico from the north line and one-third from the east. The ride all the way is in this high region. It begins with quite rapid descent, and then continues at quite a uniform level with some long swells in the ground. Extensive beds of bituminous coal are worked on the south side of the mountains, which we are fast leaving in the rear. Short spurs of the railroad track run out to the opening at their base, where the veins of the coal are found. We dash across small streams forming the head-waters of the Canadian River, which traverses northern Texas and nearly lengthwice the Indian Territory, and then empties into the Arkansas. They seem to be as clear, cool and sparkling as the rills from copious mountain springs. At least a dozen villages, varying in size, are passed; and over a score of ranches, where live the herders of the cattle, sheep, and horses seen feeding in immense numbers along the road.

At Wagon Mound we crossed the old Santa Fe trail, a place celebrated for a well-contested fight in which Kit Carson was once engaged with the Indians. It is named from two small peaks which resemble the hubs of carriage wheels. They were formed by some internal eruption of the earth, and are perhaps the small cones of external volcanoes, and lie east and west of the hamlet. As an old land mark, it is a good point at which to read up some of the thrilling narratives of the weary journeys, the heroic adventures, and the sanguinary encounters which have taken place on this trail, from 1540, when Coronado first explored this region as far east as near the Missouri River, down to the time in the memory of the children in our homes. For over seventy years merchandize was freighted on this route from the Mississippi River to the oldest city in the United States, lying in the center of the northern half of this Territory. The packed mules, the high wagons, which were called "the schooners of the plains," and the long trains of gold-seekers who were bound for the gulches in the mountains and on the Pacific coast, have all given place to the steam engines and the railroad cars which transport in a few hours crowds of passengers and vast loads of goods to the same destination. Surely there has been a process of evolution in the history of this trail. The scenery through which it passes, like the stories to which it has given rise, is the most fascinating in these mountain regions.

The day was exceptionally favorable for seeing objects at great distances. The Rocky Mountain range proper, which terminates to the west of Las Vegas and just south of Santa Fe, lays along the horizon to the right during the entire ride of seven hours from Raton. This range presents a continual succession of lofty mountains covered with snow. With its northern extension into Colorado. It contains the highest peaks and the greatest number of them, of any mountain range in the United States. Looking out westward from the cars, the eye first scans the grazing lands rising gradually with occasional high knolls, next rests upon the foot-hills beyond, and then is fixed upon the ragged white summits which course the whole view. Twice at turns in the road, the broad and open sweep of the country to the north came into sight, and numerous snowy pinnacles over a hundred and twenty miles away, were seen as a dazzling back ground against the sky. I became absorbed in intense interest in noticing the sharp ridges which ran down the mountains nearest to me on the west, the varying colors of dark green, light gray, bluish puryle, and silver whiteness, which appear at different points upon them, and the distinct "timber line" along the range. I pointed out an immense capital "S" on the eastern slope of the mountains, immediately south of the Castilla Peak, the initial letter of the first word in the old Spanish name of this range, "Sangre de Christo," (Blood of Christ.) Like the image on the "Mount of the Holy Cross" in Northern Colorado, this letter is formed by the snow which has fallen into deep ravines on the mountain side and remains there at all seasons of the year, while that on the surface about the ravines melts away in the summer time.

I had here my first experience in "the deception of distances," which it produces by the transparent air of these mountains and plains. I informed my companions in the car that I judged the range to the west to be six or eight miles distant. What was my surprise to find that it was at least sixty-four miles. "Old Baldy," which towered above the surrounding mountains, seemed to be in close neighborhood to us, but it was seventy-four miles away. I discovered afterwards that it remains at intervals in plain sight of the train all day on the journey to Santa Fe, and with the same apparent nearness. In silent and stern grandeur, it reigns the undisputed monarch of this section, and is a perpetual welcomed sight to the eye.

Whoever journeys through this country for hundreds of miles in every direction, will soon abandon all his former standards of judging distances. He will learn to sympathize with the victim of repeated experiments to which a young man was compelled to some years since, and the traditions of which are told with slight variations in many villages and mining camps, and on the wearisome stage rides in this upland region. The story is a follows: An elderly gentleman after residing a while in the mountains, brought back from the East his son, who had just graduated from college. The next morning after their arrival, on saddling their horses for a day's ride, the father said that if they should travel briskly until night they would arrive at the base of a mountain to which he pointed. The son remarked, "What do you mean, father, we shall reach the place in a half-hour." The reply was, "we shall see. The fathers prediction was verified when the sun was setting. After several disappointments of this kind, the youth began to distrust his ability to measure any horizontal distance. One day as he was walking over a portion of the country with his father, he suddenly stopped at the bank of a rill coming down from a mountain, and began pulling off his shoes and stockings. The sire inquired: "What are you doing that for?" The answer was, "Why, to wade through this stream." "Pshaw, jump over it, my son," said the father. "Ah, you cannot fool me again, I may find this to be a river a mile wide."

Dogs in Berlin.

"Love me, love my dog," is a motto which is pretty general here in Germany, especially in the larger towns and cities; for every German who can afford the luxury has a dog or two. And the breeds of dogs are almost as numerous as the people. The upper classes affect large bloodhounds, heavy and strong enough to make short work of a man on occasion; or else they go to the opposite extreme, and are the happy owners of diminutive lap dogs, whose sleek sides and embroidered blankets bear eloquent testimony to the love, and even adoration, they are held in by their doting female owners. But these are what might be called the aristocratic circle of the dog society. Below this exclusive and blue-blooded layer comes the much more numerous, and more useful, plebian dog, who has to earn his own living and aid his master in getting his. To an American there is something very amusing in this utilizing of dog power, and one watches the curious little carts go clattering over the stone pavements with mingled feelings of pity for the dog and anger toward the masters who force the poor little brutes to make horses of themselves. But everybody in the lower classes must work, and work hard, to keep the wolf from the door; and, if the dogs are unfortunate enough to be born into a peasant family, one should not feel very bad about it. But the dogs—some of them, at least—seem to feel pretty happy and contented, and go trotting along in front of their load with their tails up and wagging, while their masters busy themselves in pulling back on the wagon tongue to restrain their eagerness.

One sees various combinations and styles of dog teams, varying, of course, with the wealth and station in life of the owners. For ordinary purposes and light work, a single dog is sufficient, but when the load to be drawn is a little heavier, and the owner's purse will not permit of the extra expense of another dog to feed, a boy is put in on the other side of the tongue, and dog and boy go contentedly along together, the dog, of course, doing most of the work, and the boy, as all boys will, amusing himself by whistling, racing with other teams, and stopping now and then to discuss matters with other boys. When there isn't a boy handy, which is tolerably frequent, an old woman or a girl hitches herself in alongside of the dog and tugs along steadily, feeling, no doubt, happy and contented in her possession of one of woman's rights. Those who are a little wealthier or a little more aristocratic employ a double team of dogs, and the creme de la creme, so to speak, of the peasantry go to the extravagance of hitching in three dogs. But this latter is rather rare, because the old women are sufficiently numerous to enable one to avoid such an extravagant outlay. The old women must be fed, and why should they remain idle? Not only are these dog teams employed by the peasants to draw their loads of vegetables, milk and the like, but some of the stores have them attached to delivery wagons. Perhaps it is merely a matter of taste, but it seems to me that purchase of dry goods delivered by one of these dog teams would not seem so good as if it were delivered by one of the fine turnouts one sees in San Francisco bearing the names of some of the dry goods firms there. One can not imagine dow much there is in early education until he has had an opportunity to test it.

Although Berlin is, in many respects, a very paradise for dogs, yet in some others it is not. For every dog, be he plebeian or aristocrat, must wear a tag and a muzzle; so that a dog can not amuse himself by getting into heated political discussions with other dogs, nor can he assert his independence by remonstrating in a tone of biting sarcasm with one who is unfortunate enough to tread on his tail. There is no respect for dog personage in the imposition of the muzzle; but, from the fierce, resentful bloodhound down to the little, fearful, cringing poodle, all must wear muzzles whenever they appear in public. During the "dog days" every dog must be led by a string when he appears on the street, on pain of confiscation and destruction. But when the dreaded days are over and there is no more danger from rabid canines, there is a sort of dog holiday. On a certain day all the dogs appear on the streets decked in ribbons fantastically disposed about neck, body and tail. On such a day the streets are a moving kaleidoscope of bright colors, and the dogs, freed from strings and leashes, go barking and frisking about the streets. In some cities of Germany the dogs are allowed greater liberties than this, and are permitted to run about on this day freed from the restraint of even a muzzle. One can then amuse himself to his heart's content in watching the antics and gambols of dogs of all shapes, sizes, colors, degrees of decorations and stations in life. Dog nature, vanity and jealousy appear greatest on such an occasion; for dogs, as well as men, know when they are well dressed; are proud of bright colors, and are as jealous of their more fortunate fellows as are their masters. At such times canine altercations are numerous, and ribbons and decorations suffer. Some dog belonging to an aristocratic family will come trotting down the street swelled with pride over his expensive trimmings and decorations, and casting disdainful glances at his less fortunate fellows. But he does not go very far before he falls in with some democratic dog who does not believe in an aristocracy, and the result is that the aristocrat is humbled and rolled in the dirt, and goes off home, bleeding and stripped of his ribbons, to carry consternation into the bosom of some doting mistress, while the democratic dog picks the shreds of cloth out of his teeth and looks for another high-toned dog to "take down a peg."—Berlin Cor. Francisco Chronicle.

—The London Academy charges that "Mr. Mosely, a student at Oxford, is revolutionary in the matter of the endothecal dissepiments of the true madreporaria, and tabulæ among coelenterates forming a corallum." It rather intimates that he has flocred these, and is now sharpening his spear for "the last form of the stylasters."

—The proverb is reversed. Angels rush in where—men—fear to tread, according to a Denver paper, which says that women show more courage in their explorations of the mining region than do many male tourists.

Hard on the Family Linen.

"Chloride of Lime Water for Washing Purposes" is a sign in an up-town grocery store. This is a simple and direct answer to the question so persistently asked during the last year or so, to wit: What wears out the clothes? Intelligent housekeepers know that the rubbing and energetic handling which linen undergoes in the process of honest and legitimate washing wears on it and tears on it just as much, if not more, than ordinary use. But neither honest wear nor honest washing could possibly account for the destruction of the family linen which has gone on for some time past in our laundries. Recognizing this fact, it was concluded that some chemical preparation was used by laundresses in the washing of clothes which had a destructive effect on the fiber of the goods. Many have, no doubt, found out what this preparation is before now, although, particularly in such a case, the secrecy of all parties concerned in its use made a successful investigation very difficult.

The destructive nature of chloride of lime is pretty well known. If clothes are put in water wherein chloride of lime has been dissolved and the clothes are left there so that the chemical has free and uninterrupted action, they will be burned away just as surely as though they were set on fire by any ordinary flame. The damage done to the clothes will depend altogether on the time they are allowed to stay in the water. At whatever time they come out, though, they will be purely and beautifully white.

The last fact explains fully the reasons which laundresses have for its use. It saves them the necessity of rubbing the clothes in the good old-fashioned way. And when they have been put through chloride of lime water they will be whiter and clearer in color than any that have been rubbed, no matter how energetic or old-fashioned the rubbing may have been.

How servants discovered the properties of cloride of lime in this direction it is of course impossible to say. Every girl who claims that she can "wash and iron" now possesses that acquaintance. If, however, a girl from the country or any other paradise of innocence goes into a laundry connected with one of our apartment houses and displays ignorance on such an important point, she is very speedily enlightened, after having been guyed and pitied by her wiser companions. In such case, the housekeeper has no sooner begun to congratulate herself on having secured an honest servant than the servant is spoiled, and the destruction to shirts and skirts, sheets and pillow-cases, goes on with familiar and discouraging rapidity. Unfortunately this chloride of lime is cheap. It comes within the means of a laundress. For ten cents she can buy sufficient of it to make three bottles of a solution, each bottle of which is sufficient for a large washing. She puts the clothes to soak over night, and pours in her solution of chloride of lime. In the morning she wrings out the clothes and puts them on the line to dry. Inquiry has made the fact clear that druggists have regular customers in these laundresses and servants for this chloride of lime, and occasionally for borax and ammonia.

The destruction which servants accomplish by the use of these preparations can scarcely be over-estimated. A man who injured himself by jumping off a street car, while in motion, said that he had saved so much time in the past by doing this very thing that he could afford to be laid up a month or so with his injury. So a girl who does not burn the family linen by chloride of lime might be allowed by her mistress to carry it all away for her own personal use while it was still in good condition. If she had used the chemical the clothes would long before that have been in the rag-bag, and large expenses incurred to replace them. In other words, the use of the preparation is just as much a crime as stealing. The destruction of linen is not like the destruction of crockery or glassware, which may come from carelessness or unavoidable accident. It is deliberate and criminal, and certainly should be dealt with according to law. Any mistress who finds her servant treating her linen with chloride of lime should have her arrested precisely as though she were caught setting fire to them. It is practically the same thing. It don't make much difference whether you poison a man slowly or shoot him. In both cases death is the result. So chloride of lime destroys linen just as completely as fire, only a little more slowly. Any girl who will, in the criminal way described, utterly destroy the family linen, would not hesitate very long before putting arsenic in the family teapot.

If the law, as now written, is not sufficiently explicit to enable those who have their linen destroyed to arrest and punish laundresses who are guilty of using chloride of lime or other chemicals in the wash, the Legislatures of the various States should speedily enact a law for the arrest and punishment of such laundresses or laundry proprietors who are found using the article specified. The punishment should be as severe as that for arson, for it is nothing more or less. In the meantime let some public-spirited mistress who discovers a servant destroying her clothes in the wash have her arrested, brought before a police magistrate, and make a test case. Some such energetic step should certainly be taken. Housekeepers should also avoid all preparations sold for the purpose of whitening the clothes, or so-called labor-saving soaps, and see that none such are used in their laundries. We are told that certain manufacturers of laundry soaps are guilty of using chloride of lime and other chemicals in the preparation of their soaps. To satisfy ourselves of the truth of this we are having soap from several manufacturers analyzed by an expert chemist, and shall publish his report, giving the full facts, when completed. We can not think it possible that any respectable soap manufacturer would use so destructive a material as chloride of lime under any pretext whatever, but if so the severest penalties should be meted out to him.—Andrews' American Queen.

Sugar From Rags.

The newspapers have lately taken up the subject of making sugar from rags, and some of them seem to regard it as a new invention. This however is by no means the case. It has been long known to chemists that if vegetable fiber, such as that of cotton, flax, etc., be submitted to the action of sulphuric acid, it is converted into soluble starch or dextrine, and this is readily convertible into sugar. The ordinary process of malting is simply a conversion of the starch of the barley into sugar by the agency of a ferment called the "diastase," which is formed in the barley, and is so effective that only one five-hundredth part is sufficient to set up the action by which the insoluble starch is converted into dextrine, and then into sugar. This occurs when the grain of barley is sown in the ground, and is the natural operation by which the germ is fed; the germ, having neither mouth nor stomach, can not take solid food like the original granules which surround it in the seed; but when that starch is converted into sugar, the baby plant can absorb it, and continues to absorb it until its rootlets and first leaf are formed. By this time the sugar is all used up, but the plant is now able to obtain its nourishment from the ground by its root, and from the carbonic acid of the air by its green leaf or leaves.

Such is the ordinary life history, not only of the barley plant, but of all others. The starch is to the plant germ what the yolk and white of the egg are to the chick germ. If the sugar was ready formed in the seed it would be dissolved away by the water in the soil, and the germ would perish prematurely, but by the exquisite chemistry of nature the conversion of the insoluble starch into the soluble food of the germ goes on just as fast as the germ can use it, and thus the supply is kept up till the young plant can shift for itself. The malster forces the natural process, and then kills the germ by roasting the seed when he has obtained the maximum amount of sugar.

Fruits also are sugar factories, in which is conducted the whole process of making sugar from rags, the fiber of the rags being represented by the fiber of the unripe fruit. Every boy who has struggled to eat an unripe apple or a pear knows that the unwholesome luxury is what he calls "woody," as well as sour. The chemist describes it similarly. His technical name for the tough material is "woody fiber," under which name he includes nearly all the fibrous materials of the vegetable world, for they all have fundamentally similar chemical composition. This woody fiber is made up of carbon and the elements of water. Starch and sugar are composed of the same elements, their differences of properties being due to differences of arrangements and proportions of the constituent elements. Thus the change of insoluble starch into dextrine, and dextrine into sugar, or the change of woody fiber into dextrine and sugar, are effected by very small modifications of chemical composition.

We all know that the unripe apple or pear is sour, or that it contains an acid as well as the woody matter. Now, this appears to act after the manner of the sulphuric acid that the chemist applies to the rags, but it acts more slowly and effectively. The sweetest of pears are gathered when hard and quite unfit for eating, but by simply setting them aside and giving this acid time enough to do its work, the hard fibrous substance becomes converted into a delicious, sweet, juicy pulp.

The natural chemistry here has a great advantage over the artificial operation, seeing that the natural acid either becomes itself converted into sugar or combines with the basic substances in the fruit, forming wholesome salts. Not so the sulphuric acid of the chemist. He must get rid of this from his rag sugar; and herein lies the difficulty of the process. To do this practically would cost so much that the rag sugar would be far dearer than that which nature beneficently manufactures by similarly, but more effectively, acting upon the fibers of the sugar cane or beet root.

There is little risk of the sugar trade being disturbed, or of the paper makers being deprived of their raw material, by the rivalry of rag sugar, though the chemist may display in a show glass some crystals that he has made from one of his own worn-out shirts.—New Orleans Sugar Planter.

SAYS the Detroit Free Press: "One of Detroit's wealthiest men says that after he got his first thousand dollars he never saw the time when he failed to make money with the greatest ease." It is usually the first thousand dollars that bothers a man, but why he is accumulating it he is liable to form habits of industry and economy which he cannot shake off in after years, and he goes right on making money all his life as though he was wound up.

Do You Follow Me?

A couple of Angolians were exchanging fabrications at the Morse House. The rivalry had been quite animated, and a shade of disappointment hovered for an instant over the fine features of one of the contestants. He chewed his moustache for a moment in silence. At last he spoke:

"That reminds me of a terrible time I had in Toledo last summer. I had engaged to sell washing machines for a firm down there; one of them was old Ben Pinkeye—you know him—and he had agreed to pay me sixty-five dollars a month and expenses. Do you follow me?"

"Oh, Yes."

"Yes; well, Ben. Pinkeye, who, you know, married Asa Platter's sister, who used to shave shingles up at Saginaw—Asa, not his sister—concluded to give me a drive around the city before I started out on my trip. Do you follow me?"

"Yes, certainly."

"After she became Mrs. Platter, there was some kind of trouble broke out in the family; I don't know exactly what it was, might have been caused by the old folks and it might have been because Pinkeye had cold feet. Do you follow me?"

"Well—eh—how was that?"

"This way. Asa Platter married Ben. Pinkeye's sister June 15, 1869, and when I went to Toledo to sell washing machines Asa wanted me to go up to Saginaw with him to shave shingles. At Saginaw we fell in with Charley Adams—you know Charley."

"Oh, yes."

"Well, Charley at that time was rather sweet on Asa Platter's sister. He said before we went to work that he would give us a ride around the city behind his new bays which he had just bought of Bill Ringold—you know Bill."

"Y-e-s, but I—"

"Yes, Bill was a good enough fellow; a little wild, perhaps, and thought too much of a fast horse. If there was any one thing in this world he did think more of, it was Asa Platter's sister. Do you follow me?"

"I thought you said Ben. Pinkeye married Asa Platter's sister."

"We are coming to that. We rode all over Saginaw and had a gay time generally, and that night Ben. Pinkeye and I had to go back to Toledo to look after the washing machines. Do you follow me?"

"I thought you said Asa Platter went with you to Saginaw."

"No; this was the way. Charley Adams came down from Saginaw where he had been shaving shingles for Ben. Pinkeye and asked me to go into the washing machine business with him at Toledo. I was then quite sweet on Ben. Platter's sister and anxious, of course, to make all the money I could. So I told Asa Pinkeye that if I went up to Saginaw to shave shingles for Ben. Platter I must first see Charley Adams and get him to keep my bay team in Dick Potter's barn—you know Dick Potter."

"Oh, yes."

"Yes; well, it ran along this way for a couple of weeks, or more, and matters didn't seem to get any better, so I concluded to make a break for Detroit and get a divorce. Do you follow me?"

The listener drew his hand across his eyes wearily, and said:

"I'll have to get you to repeat that last over again. You state it correctly enough, but I must have smoked too much after supper."

"Yes; well, you see, it ran along this way for a couple of weeks, or more, and matters didn't seem to get any better, so Asa Platter concluded to make a break for Detroit and get a divorce from his sister. Do you follow m?"

"From his sister!"

"No, from Asa Potter's sister. You know Dick Platter married Ben. Potter's sister and went to Saginaw to shave shingles for Charley Adams, who used to be in the washing machine business in Toledo. Well matters ran along in this way for, perhaps a couple of months. Do you follow me?"

The weary listener slowly arose, and walked up to the office.

"Boys, cigars all around; and if you'll take that lamp and mosey for bed, for the first time this evening I'll follow you."—Steuben Republican.

Whar Was His Six-Shooter.

A man in an Austin saloon, read out a newspaper account of a prize fight to a group of earnest listeners. Among the most interested listeners was an old frontiersman, who continually interrupted the reader with such ejaculations as: "What! knocked him down again?" "Did you say he hit him in the chest?" Finally, when still another knock down was scored, he could stand it no longer, and called out in a perfect frenzy of excitement:

"Whar in the — was his six-shooter?"

A Baptist Minister's Experience.

I am a Baptist Minister, and before I even thought of being a clergyman, I graduated in medicine, but left a lucrative practice for my present profession, 40 years ago. I was for many years a sufferer from quinsy; "THOMAS' ELECTRIC OIL cured me." I was troubled with hoarseness, and Thomas' Electric Oil always relieved me. My wife and child had diptheria, and "Thomas' Electric Oil cured them," and if taken in time it will cure seven times out of ten. I am confident it is a cure for the most obstinate cold or cough, and if any one will take a small teaspoon and half fill it with the Oil, and then place the end of the spoon in one nostril and draw the Oil out of the spoon into the head by snuffing as hard as they can, until the Oil falls over into the throat, and practice that twice a week, I don't care how offensive their head may be, it will clean it out and cure their catarrh. For deafness and ear-ache it has done wonders to my certain knowledge. It is the only medicine dubbed patent medicine that I have ever felt like recommending, and I am very anxious to see it in every place, for I tell you that I would not be without it in my house for any consideration, I am now suffering with a pain like rheumatism in my right limb, and nothing relieves me like Thomas' Eclectric Oil.

PHYSIOLOGISTS are agreed that the worst form of cruelty to animals is to starve them. From an insufficiency of food they suffer longer, and, there is good ground for supposing, far more intensely, than from wounds or broken bones. One proof of this is that the severest injuries will not prevent them from eating—as witness the frequently adduced instances of horses after being wounded in a battle.

"A PASTOR'S Resignation" is the heading of a paragraph in an exchange. We thought it might refer to the Christian spirit with which he had received a "surprise party" of parishioners, who came to present him with a gold-headed cane or gilt-edged Bible. We were mistaken—he had merely lost his third wife.

Kentucky Romance.

In Boone County, Kentucky, not many miles below Cincinnati, a few years ago, there lived a wealthy widower by the name of Joshua James, who, having reached his seventieth year, concluded to again try the pleasures of married life, being childless, and having spent forty years in single blessedness. He proposed to a neighboring tenant's daughter, Miss Malie Stokes, a young girl of eighteen, but the rustic beauty rejected him with scorn. Enraged at the fair one's refusal of his hand and wealth, he undertook to punish her by wholesale defamation of character. This attempt at revenge landed the old lover into Court as the defendant in a suit for $10,000 damages. While the case was pending in Court, Mr. James met at a public gathering Annie, the sister, and a year younger than Malie, his first choice, and spoke to her of the trouble in Court, which, he said, had all been caused by Malie foolishly rejecting him, and which he didn't believe that she (Annie) would have done.

"No, indeed," she replied, "I wouldn't have treated you that way."

"All right," exclaimed the amorous old fellow; "I will make the same offer to you. Get in my buggy and we will go right off and get married."

Without a moment's hesitation the girl obeyed. They drove to Cincinnati, were married, and returned home before her parents knew what had happened. The slander suit of the older sister was finally compromised, but the husband would not allow his wife's folks to visit her or allow her to visit them. He kept his child-wife locked a prisoner in the costly home he took her to, and spent his days in cruelly tormenting her. He would whip, starve, and in various ways inhumanly treat her. Finally, to evade his persecutions, she made her escape from the second-story window and sought refuge in a neighboring house two miles distant. The enraged husband pursued, overtook and carried her back to his home, where, after tying her fast and shooting his revolver over her head several times, he made her swear she would never again attempt to leave him. This varied cruelty continued for nearly a year after the marriage, when the brutal husband took sick with a fever, and in a few days released his wife from her torments by dying. Left the only heir to a large fortune of $50,000, the young widow spent several months enjoying her freedom, when she again married, but this time a young man of her own age, named Williams, who, though poor, gives promise of making her a kind husband, and, with the wealth of the first husband and the love of the second, the honeymoon for the bride is filled with happiness.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Color of Horses.

This is a subject to which we may perhaps attach more importance than is generally accorded to it. It has passed into a proverb that "a good horse can not be of a bad color." We shall, however, merely give what, in our experience, are good colors and what bad—not looking to the color as influencing the strength and good qualities of the animal, but as an index to its constitution. Now, a light chestnut sorrel, with white legs and feet, naturally suggests the idea that he is a weak, washy brute; while on the other hand, a dark chestnut, with darker points, gives immediately the impression of a good constitution. We believe these opinions, however conveyed, are proved to be perfectly right. There are, of course, exceptions, but we take the rule. Again, a bay horse, with black points, or even with a white leg or two, is a very good color; so is a dark and mottled brown—in fact, there is none better; but no color is a certain guarantee of quality, though, as we before said, we look upon it as a not unreliable index. For many purposes a gray color is looked upon as a drawback, and so is that of "yaller." We never heard of any objections to the black color, nor do we know of any. Some horses are said to show "character" in their coloring, as, for instance, a bull terrier does with a patch over his eye. Thus a brown or black horse, with three white legs and a blaze, although not the perfection of marking, gives such a quaint appearance that the animal is instictively, and rightly, put down as having "character" about him, and is often a very good horse. As a rule, it will be seen that we look upon a brown, dark chestnut, and light bay as the best colors, implying blood and good constitutions, and the less white they have about them the better. White feet are particularly objectionable, as they are generally inclined to be flat and weak; and a horse which shows much white about his eyes is often tricky, sometimes a bad feeder, and vicious.

Virtue Acknowleged.

Mrs. Ira Mulholland, Albany, N. Y., writes: "For several years I have suffered from oft-recuring billious headaches, dyspepsia, and complaints peculiar to my sex. Since using your BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS I am entirely relieved." Price $1,00.

YOUNG LADY ELOCUTIONISTS.

Mrs. Noon's Pupils Develop More Than Ordinary Declamatory and Musical Accomplishments.

The recital at Cannon's hall, last evening, by the pupils of Mrs. S. R. Noon, was a gratifying success to those who contributed to the entertainment, and a well-deserved compliment to the lady under whose tutelage the pupils have attained such proficiency. The acquisition of any accomplishment, when unsupported by natural propensity and talent, is extremely difficult, and the training of the voice, whether in declamation or music, is perhaps attended with more trials, and requires more sedulous care and practice than any. Mrs. Noon, therefore, is entitled to a great deal of credit, for the really good display of elocutionary powers, made by her pupils last night. The selections in the main were difficult, but the delivery showed that the young ladies had studied hard, and correctly interpreted their pieces. The emphasis and intonation, with of course, the exception of some faulty inflections and occasional exaggerated dramatic pronunciation, were very good. The hall was in keeping with the fresh, happy young faces of the pupils, and a delicious odor of flowers pervaded it, lending an additional charm to the bright scene. There were tiny baskets filled with flowers, suspended from every gas jet, with here and there larger receptacles of the same kind laden with the perfumed beauties of nature. The stove in the rear of the hall was an ellipsis of large white roses, graced with the brighter colors of the violet and carnation.

The exercises were introduced by Mr. Pliny Norcross in a short and well chosen address. The first thing on the programme, a piano duet by Misses Allie Child and Maud Crane, was well rendered, and little Miss Birdie McDonald entertained her hearrs with a nicely spoken recitation entitled "Mollie's Trial." "The Independence Bell" by Miss Jessie Fredricks. "The Engeneer's Story" by Miss Maud Crane, "The Death of King John" by Miss Monnie Leach, "The Blacksmith of Limmerwick" by Miss Frankie Leach, and "The Fall of Pemberton Mills" by Miss Ida Davies, were very agreeably given, but space does not permit of a more extended mention. Miss Viata Anderson, gave two excellent dialect recitations "Biddy's Trials among the Yankees" and another humorous Irish selection. "Led Astray" by Miss Mary Pond was spoken in a manner which gave it that pathetic impressiveness, the story so eloquently bears.

The best features of the evening, were a piano solo by Miss Ada Pond and the waltz song by Miss Etta Pond. Miss Ada rendered Ascher's Lucrezia Borgia, in a manner which would reflect credit on a much older person. The Score is difficult in places yet the the closest attention failed to detect false notes lapses, or incorrect measure. Miss Etta's voice, for one so young gives promise of excellency and is susceptibile to a high cultivation if not taxed too strongly in the higher register where it is now necessarily weak. Miss Allie Child's piano solo and a vocal duet by Misses Fannie Ray and Etta Pond were among the most enjoyable portions of the programme. Encores were frequent, and the young ladies made the happy recipients of flowery remembrances by admiring friends.

The Opera To-Night.

Myers' Opera house should be graced this evening with an audience such as would do credit to the appreciative discernment of the Janesville public. Mlle. Litta and her support of artists, certainly deserve patronage, if art and merit are worthy of recognition. The programme contains some morceaux of the highest order, and the soloists are fully competent to do justice to the great composers who gave them to the world. The production of the second act of Martha is, in itself, worth the price of admission. It abounds with some of the choicest arias in the score, and the best selections from the libretto. A full house should greet the company, and none who attend will have the slightest cause for cavil or disappointment. New scenery and other accessories will be put on and the rendered portion of "Martha" given as nearly as possible the effect it requires.

Mlle. Litta and party arrived here to-day on the train from Fond du Lac, and are stopping at the Myers House.

The Weather.

REPORTED BY PRENTICE & EVENSON, DRUGGISTS.

The indications were:

Lake Regions—Slightly warmer, east to south winds, partly cloudy weather, light local rains in upper lake region, stationary or lower barometer.

Prejudice Kills.

"Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery undsr the care of several of the best (and some of the worst) physicians, who gave her disease various names but no relief, and now she is restored to us in good health by as simple a remedy as Hop Bitters, that we had poohed at for two years, before using it. We earnestly hope and pray that no one else will let their sick suffer as we did, on account of prejudice against so good a medicine as Hop Bitters."—The Parents.

Eli Perkins and Three-Card Monte Men.

The reason why I urge upon every one, however smart, not to put too much confidence in his own smartness will be seen further on.

I had to wait several hours at Monmouth, Ill., a station on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road. Monmouth has been frequented by three-card monte men for years. I have always known it, have often seen them there, and have often written about them.

Well, they were there again. One of them, with a Canada-Bill dialect, wanted to show me some strange "keerds" that he got up in Chicago.

"What were you doing up there?" I asked, knowing that he was a three-card monte man, and feeling an interest in his modes.

"Me and pap," he said, "took up some hogs. We took up a pile on 'em, an' made a heap; but pap he got swindled by a three-keerd monte man. Got near ruined. But I grabbed the keerds, and I'll show you how they done it."

"Never mind, boys," I said; "I know all about it. I know the whole racket. Now I'll keep quiet, mind my own business, and let you try your monte game on some one a little more fresh."

The monte boy saw at once that I was posted, and soon turned his attention to a good-looking, jolly, young, and innocent clergyman in the depot. In a few moments I saw that the innocent clergyman had become deeply interested. His interest grew as he watched the cards. There were three ordinary business cards, like these:

WILLOUGHBY, HILL & CO.,
Clothing.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF,
Dr. Radway.

PIPER-HEIDSIECK,
John Osborne & Son.

"I believe I can tell which card has Willoughby & Hill on it," said the innocent clergyman.

"All right—try it," said the monte-man, flopping them about.

"There, that one!" said the clergyman, smiling.

Sure enough he was right.

"I don't see how your poor father could lose all his money at such a simple game as that," said the clergyman, "Why, your eyes can see the cards all the time."

"Suppose you bet $5 that you can tell," suggested the monte-man.

"All right, I'll risk it," said the clergyman, "though I don't like to win money that way."

The cards were turned, and, of course, the poor, unsuspecting clergyman lost. Again he tried it, hoping to get his $5 back, but lost again. Then he put up his last dollar and lost that. Then, seeming to realize his situation, he put his hand to his head and walked out of the depot.

"To think," he said, "that I, a clergyman, should get caught in this game. Why, I might have known it was three-card monte. I've no respect for myself," and he wiped his eyes like a man who felt the most accute condemnation.

"Why don't you complain of the scoundrel?" I said.

"I would, but I am a clergyman, and if they should hear of my sin and foolishness in Peoria, I would be relieved. My poor family would suffer for my sins."

"Then I'd keep quiet about it," I said; "but let it be a lesson to you never to think you know more than other people."

"But they've got my last dollar, and I want to go to Peoria. I must be there to preach on Sunday," said the innocent suffering man.

"Can't you borrow of some one?" I asked.

"No one knows me, and I do not like to tell my name here after this occurrence," said the poor man, half crying.

"Very well," I said, "hand me your card, and I will let you have $5, and you can send it to me at the Palmer House, Chicago, when you get to Peoria," and I handed the poor man the money.

A moment afterwards I spoke to the agent at the depot about the wickdness of these monte-men and told him how I had to lend the poor clergyman $5 to get home.

"And you lent him $5?"

"Yes, I lent the poor man the money."

"Well, by the great guns!" and then he swung his hat and yelled to the operator:

"Bill, you know that ministerial-looking man around here?"

"You mean the capper for the three-card-monte men, don't you—Bill Keyes, Missouri Bill?"

"Yes."

"Well, by the great guns, he's the best man in the whole gang! He's just struck old Eli Perkins for $5. It does beat me what blankety-blankety fools them darned newspaper fellers are!"—Eliar Perkins in Chicago Tribune.

Down in Florida.

The St. John's River is a queer river, says a Florida correspondent. It is about 150 miles long, from four to ten miles wide, and averages about a foot deep. In the center, of course, the channel gets to be quite deep. Sometimes it has a depth of forty feet. Its current runs about a mile a day. I presume it would take about 150 days for a cork to float from the source of the St. John's to its mouth. It is salt for fifty miles from its mouth, and brackish for 100 miles. It is full of shad, catfish, frogs, toads, eels, alligators, and cawl-fishes. I don't know of any fish or reptile that don't live in the St. John's River.

"Call this a river?" I said to an old alligator killer who was fishing for catfish off the pier at Palatka. "Why, it's a great bay. It's no more a river than Lake Erie is. Lake Erie runs faster than the St. John's River."

"Thar you's wrong agen, stranger. She's neither a river nor a bay; she's a cow pasture. Don't you see the cows standing all over the river?"

That man was right. All the cows in Florida seemed to congregate in the St. John's. There they stood in the water all day long, slashing the mosquitoes with their tails, while their heads are under water eating grass. It is a strange thing, indeed, to see droves of cattle feeding along a river with their heads under the water. They look like a lot of cattle without heads. They will put even their horns and ears under when the grass lays deep, and keep them under sometimes two minutes. They get to be as amphibious as the crocodile. A submarine cow pasture is an institution enjoyed by the State of Florida.

A FRENCH manufacture claims the discovery of making use of leaves of the eucalyptus tree as a substitute for tobacco leaves in cigars. The eucalyptus leaves emit a delicious odor in burning.
